COLORADO BUFFALOES

2012-13 REVIEW

The defending Pac-12 Conference tournament champions Colorado Buffaloes kicked off the 2012-13 basketball season in a way it never has before.

On Thursday, October 12 at the Colorado vs. Arizona State football game, all players from the 2011-12 championship team—with the exception of Carlton Brown, Austin Dufault, Shannon Sharpe, and Nate Tomlinson who were unable to attend—received a standing ovation from the 46,000 fans in attendance as Pac-12 commissioner Larry Scott presented the 10 players with their championship rings.

Colorado sophomore guard Askia Booker said, "To be out there and get that award in front of everybody and all the fans that supported us, I think it was a great night." Booker said he gave the ring to his mother as a symbol of all the hard-work he put forth during his freshman year of college.

On opening night of the 2012-2013 season, the Buffaloes opened the season with a 74-59 victory over Wofford. Prior to the game, the Buffs celebrated the team's 2011-12 Pac-12 Conference Championship, with the unveiling of an engraved sandstone edifice hanging in the south end of the Coors Events Center.

"We took this opportunity to showcase our first Pac-12 championship in basketball in a unique way, one that marries itself to what Boulder is all about," said then-CU athletic director Mike Bohn. "Incorporating the Flatirons, which of course were here before anything else, with the sandstone that distinguishes our campus in an unparalleled presentation within the beauty of Boulder itself. This speaks to a rock solid foundation, our tradition, as well as the future of CU athletics." It was sight to be seen as the Buffaloes were also treated to a record crowd of 10,611, the largest number of fans to see a CU men's basketball opener. The Buffaloes improved to 30-3 in home openers at the Events Center, including a string of five straight, three of those under head coach Tad Boyle.

Charleston Classic Champions: For the first time since the 2002-03 season (Pepsi Classic, Charlotte, N.C.), CU won an in-season tournament. The Buffs won three games in four days defeating Dayton (67-57); No. 16/17 Baylor (60-58); and Murray State (81-74) in the title game. Askia Booker was named the Most Valuable Player, averaging 19.3 points with 3.0 assists, 2.7 steals, and 2.3 rebounds per game. He shot 51.1 percent from the field (24-of-47) and led all scorers in all three games in scoring (game-high).

The CU men's basketball team visited the Children's Hospital at the Anschutz Medical Campus in Aurora last December 2012. Members of the team and staff were divided into three groups and escorted by a hospital volunteers and visited 100 children. The team met with children and hospital staff, signing autographs and handing out Buffalo basketball jerseys, most importantly making a lasting impression of not just those at the hospital, but the student-athletes themselves. In addition, to the team and staff, CU's beloved mascot, Chip, was also there participating in the activities. It's the second straight year during the month of December the Buffaloes have reached out to the community. Last year, the team volunteered its time with the non-profit Share-A-Gift program, an organization that helps families of need acquire children's toys for the holidays. Over 600 families were assisted by the men's basketball team by selecting toys, re-stocking shelves, transporting toys to cars, and spending time with children in the on-site day care facility. The visit to Aurora is also part of the CU Athletics Leadership Development Program. The program is designed to develop a culture of leadership in which CU student-athletes act with personal responsibility, integrity and accountability while staying committed in both principle and actions to the greater good. The program is student centered and educationally based, targeting all student-athletes. Through a culture of positive leadership, all student-athletes will inherently contribute to excellence in their academic work, in their athletic pursuits and in their personal lives.
